Topic: Describe how you ideally spend your first day after Covid-19 is gone

Like Martin Luther King, I also have a dream. My dream is to wander from places to places, soar up the limits of the sky, finding sheer happiness among the faces of people again, which is now devastated by the powerful word "COVID-19" virus. With all the offices and schools closing and the lockdown being suddenly announced I felt like being kept on a cage.

In the beginning I was quite excited because now my annual holidays ~~but~~ were being prolonged and I could enjoy some extra days playing video games and watching television all day but, within few weeks I soon started feeling bored with my lifestyle. I could neither go out to play with my friends nor could I attempt any outdoor activities.

I soon started feeling like a bird caged inside a zoo, willing to fly, but all it can do is just sleep and eat, during that time I realized how it might feel for animals who are just life longed, imprisoned inside cells.

With the Government announcing the reimplementation of the lockdown, I have lots of desire to fulfill what I had entombed within myself. The first thing I'd do after the lockdown is over is to close all the virtuality and carry myself to visit different places especially being the zoo, as I want to share my unspoken experience of being enclosed inside the four walls of my house. We used to be so consumed in our everyday life that we forgot to count our blessings and cherish them. I would also go to visit my Grandmother and thank her for the continuous blessings and motivations she provided me all around the lockdown.
